

Please join us for a special full-day program
Native Plants in the Designed Landscape
 on Thursday, June 17
 at the Hill-Stead Museum and Gardens in Farmington

Native Plants in the Designed Landscape

“Native, natural, indigenous, local” – these words are not interchangeable. Ken Druse, the award winning, nationally recognized father of natural gardening and promoter of native landscape preservation and the environmental consciousness shares ideas, experience and vivid photography to explore some of the questions we ask ourselves as we strive to promote more local plants. Can a plant community be manufactured? Can a garden satisfy the needs of the gardener and the people who use and enjoy it while also meeting the requirements of the plants that populate it?

Learning Objectives

- Examine ways to elevate the status of garden design in the minds of Americans and Connecticut residents.
- Identify creative uses for indigenous species in realistic landscape designs.
- Describe ways to fight “plant blindness” and promote recognition, knowledge and respect for local plants.

ABOUT THE KEYNOTE SPEAKER: KEN DRUSE

Author/photographer, lecturer and radio host Ken Druse has contributed to nearly every garden and home design magazine in America. He is probably best known for his books, which the New York Times called “bibles for serious gardeners.” The American Horticultural Society chose his book, The Passion for Gardening, as best book of the year; and the Wall Street Journal recommended it as one of the “five garden books to own.” Ken’s most recent book, his 17th, is PLANTHROPOLGY: The Myths, Mysteries, and Miracles of My Garden Favorites. Fans can also find Ken anytime on his podcast and public radio show Ken Druse Real Dirt, through their computers and iPods (realdirt.radio.com).

In 2004, The Garden Club of America awarded Ken The Sarah Chapman Francis medal for lifetime literary achievement.
